

Field and Garden.
THE BORDER STATE FAIR.
Extracts from the Speech of Hon. Z. B. Vance.

Thus highly favored both in soil and climate, what shall we produce mainly? With sincere diffidence I shall offer a few suggestions in this regard:

In a country so sparsely settled as ours, and where lands are held in such large bodies, the theory of a division of labor is not sound economy in farming operations. Every farm should be as nearly independent and self supporting in all respects as it can possibly be made. In mercantile parlance, a farmer should, if possible, be a general dealer to at least the extent of his own consumption. Planting, therefore, as contradistinguished from farming—by which we understand a special devotion to cotton, rice, tobacco, or any great staple,—is liable to this objection, it is not self-sustaining. An imperfect and unwise arrangement, that is, by which so many of our planters expand the proceeds of their staple crops for provisions and stock, thus paying double profits and commissions, as well as shipping away the fatness of their soils every year and placing nothing back in lieu of it. Every man who tills the soil as a means of living should surely first provide himself with everything which his farm will grow before he plants a single seed for sale. Another objection to planting, or special farming, is that it is ruinously destructive of fertility and an enemy to improvement of lands. It is, I believe, an accepted truth that there are no means of permanent improvement in our soils equal to the cultivation of some of the grasses and the rearing of flocks, which both retain and return fertility to the earth. We are here directly on the dividing line between the planting and the grazing regions of the United States, and by a judicious and scientific intermingling of both I give it as my unhesitating opinion that we stand in a better position to secure wealth by agricultural means than any other people on the continent.

To successfully develop the agricultural wealth of our country I deem it not only necessary to reform our planting system, but to open up new paths and to diversify to the utmost extent our productions. This will secure immunity, to a great extent, against the accidents of the seasons, enlarge our markets, and bring into profitable employment much labor—as of women and children—now so little used. And here permit me to remark that I regret to see that our committee, in making up their very large list of premiums, have failed to offer any inducements for essays or other information in regard to many—to us new—departments of industry. A change in this respect is imperatively demanded by our altered circumstances. In reflecting upon the many new fields of agricultural enterprise upon which our people might enter, I am forcibly impressed with the opinion that the two most promising of successful, and best adapted to our scarcity of capital and labor, are the cultivation of the vine in the lowlands and the orchards and dairies of the highlands in these two States. No surer road to fortune, it seems to me, can be found than lies here for intelligent industry.

The Scuppernon grape alone, with its various crossings, is a source of immense profit. It is extremely hardy, its culture is simple, and since the clusters of Eschell, it is perhaps the most wonderfully prolific grape in the world. Its home is, too, in that sandy belt covered by the long-leaved pine, heretofore erroneously considered almost valueless. Here, without trenching at all upon valuable grain soils, enough wine could be made from it to supply the markets of the world, and place even in the cabins of the poor a purer and healthier drink than is now seen in the saloons of the rich and great.

A statement of the yield and the sales of wine by a few gentlemen who have recently engaged in this business in North Carolina would make many a man stare who continues to gather ten bushels of corn, or five of wheat, per acre, from his worn-out fields, after the manner of his fathers.

The capacity of this grape is indeed almost marvellous. I have derived more information in regard to the subject from a practical and experienced grower of it in Duplin county, North Carolina, who I give as follows: An acre will bear twenty-one vines forty feet apart. At three years old each vine yields one peck of grapes; at five, two bushels; at ten, twenty-five bushels; at fifteen, forty bushels; many vines actually bearing fifty bushels. A bushel of best grapes, weighing sixty pounds, will make four gallons of juice, which will yield about three and a half gallons of wine, readily commanding in market $2.50 per gallon. The pouice will make five gallons of vinegar, worth fifty cents per gallon. We have thus $11.25 as the proceeds of one bushel; $450 as the proceeds of one full-grown vine. A result that almost exceeds belief, and I state it with diffidence on what appears to be no reliable authority. Even reducing every item by nine-tenths, it would still leave this grape the most prolific and most profitable one in the world; which I verily believe it to be. And I am assured by the best authority in the State that $1,000 per acre is a very moderate calculation. The labor and expenditures are very trifling, the whole not exceeding about thirty-three cents per gallon, including cost of real estate.

As to the wine itself, when properly made, Professor Charles T. Jackson, in the Patent Office Report of 1859, says of it: "The rich flavor of this grape renders it peculiarly valuable, the wine having the flavor and bouquet of the celebrated Tokay wine of Hungary. The grape, however, cannot be cultivated in the open air north of Virginia, and is a native of North Carolina. It is desirable that extensive vineyards should be established in that State expressly for the cultivation of this grape, which will make a wine that will be most eagerly sought for, as the best of American native wines.

With regard to the difficulty existing in so cold a climate as ours of preventing the acetous fermentation in the manufacture of wine, I suppose there need be no further trouble. I believe that is now pretty well established that although our summers are long, and the grape ripens while the season is yet too warm to make wine, the proper temperature can be obtained by means of vaults and cellars to secure the vinous fermentation in any part of the States; whilst in the frostless belts of the highlands the grape has been known to hang on to the vine in perfect keeping until December. This is, of course, the most favorable of all possible conditions for vine culture—a climate sufficiently warm to ripen the grape, and sufficiently cool at the season of the vintage to secure the vinous fermentation—sixty-five degrees being cool enough for that purpose.

A single fact is sufficient to show the capacity of this country for grape culture. The Scuppernon and the far-famed Catawba, the two best and most productive varieties on the continent, are natives of North Carolina. Strangers have transplanted them to no better soil and a far ruder and less congenial climate, and grown rich upon their culture, whilst we plough our worn-out cornfields, hoe our soil-destroying tobacco, and talk of hard times and the scarcity of money!

THE WASHINGTON HOUSE,
LYNCHBURG, VA.
IN NEW HANDS.
BEING the owner of this valuable property, I have on charge of it on my own account, with a determination of making it a FIRST CLASS HOTEL in all of its departments, having had it thoroughly refitted and furnished so as to accommodate both ladies and gentlemen with all conveniences and comfort.
The table will be kept well supplied at all meals with the best that the MARKET will AFFORD, while the bar will be furnished with the purest of LIQUORS, WINES, &c., and neither surpassed by any in Virginia.
The services of Mr. M. P. Bidloe, as principal manager, assisted by Mrs. J. M. Gibbs, both of them highly capable of conducting the business of hotel keeping, and being well known as such, I can with confidence assure the public that in patronizing the house, they will have no cause to complain.
The omnibus will attend the Depots regularly to take passengers up to the house and return them to the depots free of charge. Being centrally located, convenient to the principal business of the place, with the facilities of the building and with first class accommodations at reduced rates, I confidently expect a fair share of patronage from my friends and the public.
